Bar through head and doing well
There was a gasp of horror in the casualty department of Poplar Hospital, London, E., when a 50-year-old workman, Henry Arthur Sheford, of Cannon-Road, Canning Town, walked from an ambulance with a steel rod 12 inches long and half an inch thick through his head from below his left eye to behind his right ear.
He was rushed to the operating theatre and the bar was withdrawn without causing the slightest injury to either the brain or eye. Sheford is making a good recovery, and is wondering what all the fuss was about.

Decline of the English Murder

It is Sunday afternoon, preferably before the war. The wife is already asleep in the armchair, and the children have been sent out for a nice long walk. You put your feet up on the sofa, settle your spectacles on your nose, and open The News of the World. Roast beef and Yorkshire, or roast pork and apple sauce, followed up by suet pudding and driven home, as it were, by a cup of mahogany brown tea, have put you in just the right mood... In these blissful circumstances, what is it you want to read about? Naturally, a murder.
